Randall Busch, M.D.

Chief of Anesthesiology and Director of Pain Management

When someone lives with chronic pain, it effects more than the individual. Loved ones all feel the emotional impact and Dr. Randall Busch has a very special way of taking care of both his patients and their families. As the Chief of Anesthesiology and Director of the Pain Management Clinic, Dr. Busch goes above and beyond to make sure his patients are safe and comfortable.

His dedication to his profession has helped many patients over the years. Ask him to share one of his favorite memories and he'll say "Eliminating a debilitating pain syndrome in an 11-year-old girl. She was unable to walk or attend school, but she literally skipped out of the pain clinic after a therapeutic pain intervention."

Alleviating pain is his vocation and he says it is a very exciting one, "The practice of anesthesia and pain management has changed dramatically over the past few years. There have been many new and exciting developments." Dr. Busch enjoys using those advancements to prevent pain during surgery and make his patients as comfortable as possible.

Outside the hospital he enjoys reading, horsemanship, cooking and forestry management. Dr. Busch is an exceptional leader on the medical staff team at Midwest Medical Center and his heartfelt words, "Turning tears to smiles is the ultimate reward", are just a small example of why he deserves the recognition as Employee of the Month.
